

Searching for Bobby Fischer game similarity

I thought someone might be interested in a game I had long ago (2001) as my game should have ended very similar to the game seen at the end of Searching for Bobby Fischer movie that came out in 1993 (where Josh wins). Hard to believe it has been so long since the movie came out. The movie ends with only kings and white has a passed “h” pawn and black has a passed “a” pawn. Black queens after white and his new queen skewers the king (I think was on either d4 or e5) revealing an attack on white’s unprotected queened “h.” In my game I should have had white queening his “a” pawn followed by black queening his “h” pawn skewering white’s king on d5 square (a difference). It is amazing how similar my game is to the movie with black winning except for a terrible blunder by black (moving my pawn on c5- an extra pawn not seen in the movie, the difference). I admit my mistake was made under extreme time pressure (very common for me). Like the movie I had an analog clock. There was no time delay feature, meaning one could easily lose with time running out on your clock. It is difficult to figure out how many seconds one has left with an analog clock. I do remember from the game that my flag was just about to fall. What follows here is a copy of my game followed by a link to the published game which you can follow.

Last I have a link to “youtube” video clip where the game at the end of the movie Searching for Bobby Fischer is featured (only 10 minute movie clip). The movie clip has over one million views. Maybe you can add to the total. (One small thing about the movie: Josh offers a draw before he makes a move. One should always make your move and then offer a draw. There are several other things that are wrong in the movie. It would be inappropriate to say “trick or treat” to you opponent after making a move, for instance: bad sportsmanship. You should not have a conversation with opponent during the game to tell him that he is lost.)

54...c4 ??? wlc-An incredibly bad move under time pressure. The white king on d5 is the one on the bad square. Black is going to queen and skewer the white king and queen at the same time and win the game. And if white spends a move- for instance 55.Kxc5- getting off this square, then it is black who queens first and prevents white from queening, not the other way around as happens in the game.
